randomized, placebo controlled, double-blind study for the evaluation of minocycline in the treatment of papular-pustular rosacea. Rosacea is a chronic facial inflammatory disease predominantly affecting the central and periorbital skin with recurrent papules and pustules that are prone to scarring.

Minocycline is a second generation tetracycline derivative with effective broad spectrum antimicrobial activity. A randomized, placebo controlled, double-blind study was conducted on 10 patients with papular-pustular rosacea to evaluate the efficacy and safety of minocycline 50 mg twice daily, for 4 weeks. No statistically significant difference between treatment and placebo was observed in any clinical and laboratory indices following 4 weeks of therapy. Minocycline did not reduce the number or size of papules or pustules. The rate of adverse events in this study was higher than anticipated for a disease that is usually benign. Ganglioneuroma of the ampulla of Vater: report of a case. Ganglioneuroma is a benign tumor, which usually occurs in the retroperitoneum of children and young adults and is associated with neurofibromatosis. Most ganglioneuromas are multiple and bilateral, and some are found in the mediastinum or retroperitoneum. We report a case of a giant ganglioneuroma of the ampulla of Vater in a 33-year-old woman. The tumor was diagnosed by endoscopic biopsy, which revealed a giant ganglioneuroma and the tumor was resected using pancreatoduodenectomy.

Ganglioneuromas are usually benign; however, some become malignant and may occur in younger patients. The prognosis of ganglioneuroma is very good, but to date, no standard treatment has been established. Because ganglioneuroma can occur in young patients, especially in the ampulla of Vater, this tumor should be considered in the differential diagnosis of pyloric stenosis in children.) = 7*s + 27 labels. The phenolic profile and antioxidant capacity of black (Vitis vinifera L.) grape varieties. Grape products contain a number of important health-promoting phenolic compounds, some of which are responsible for their antioxidant capacity. A factorial design was used to evaluate the influence of black grape varieties on the phenolic compounds that affect the antioxidant capacity of grape skins and wines.

Corvina and Italia showed the most desirable composition, especially from the phenolic point of view. Similar concentrations of (+)-catechin and quercetin 3-O-glucoside were found in the skin of Corvina and Corvina Italia, while in Corvinaso the amount of both compounds was considerably lower. Wine from Corvinaso contained a higher proportion of gallic acid, and wines from
